Human services programs and the opioid crisis, Part 2

How the opioid crisis is hindering human services programs in meeting their objectives

- Rural communities’ challenges in accessing treatment services
  Patricia Strach, Elizabeth Pérez-Chiqués, and Katie Zuber
  page 3

- Barriers to addressing the opioid crisis
  Pamela Petersen-Baston
  page 10

- Maryland’s approach to the opioid crisis
  Randi Walters and Brandi Stockdale
  page 13

How human services programs can support successful treatment and recovery for individuals with opioid use disorder

- The response of state courts to the opioid crisis
  Deborah Taylor Tate
  page 15

- Ohio’s actions to address the opioid crisis
  Kimberly Hall
  page 19

- Supporting treatment and recovery in human services programs
  Barbara Ramlow and Carl Leukefeld
  page 21
In September 2019, the Institute for Research on Poverty hosted a forum to examine how the opioid epidemic has affected the delivery of human services, and what role those services can play in mitigating the negative effects of the crisis on individuals, families, and communities. Entitled Human Services Programs and the Opioid Crisis, the event was convened in partnership with the Office of Human Services Policy, Assistant Secretary for Planning and Evaluation, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. The forum had three objectives:

• To understand how the opioid crisis is hindering human services programs in meeting their objectives;

• To understand how human services programs can facilitate successful treatment and recovery for individuals with opioid use disorder; and

• To understand how human services programs can address the effects of the opioid crisis on their objectives.

The forum brought together over 200 stakeholders representing 29 states from a broad range of organizations including eight federal agencies as well as numerous state and local governments, nonprofit organizations, and universities. This is the second of two issues of Focus to feature material from the forum. This issue contains six articles, three that explore how the opioid crisis is hindering human services programs in meeting their objectives, and three that address how human services programs can support successful treatment and recovery for individuals with opioid use disorder.